Elevated Classic £14.00

Aviation

(Flight at midnight)

The Aviation Cocktail is a classic gin-based cocktail that has a rich history dating back to the early 20th century. The drink was created by Hugo Ensslin, a German-born bartender who was the head bartender at the Hotel Wallick in New York City.

The original recipe for the Aviation called for a combination of gin, lemon juice, maraschino liqueur, and crème de violette, a sweet and floral liqueur made from the essence of violets. The drink was a hit with cocktail enthusiasts, and it quickly became a popular choice in bars and restaurants across the United States.

Home infused Blueberry Gin, Lime Juice, Maraschino, Crème de Violette, Vegan Foamer, Poppy Seeds

Margarita

(Spiced Blossom)

The creation of the Margarita is often attributed to some crafty marketing moves from industry folk, specifically tequila manufacturers, around the 1940s.

In truth, we'll never really know where it originated. The provenance of this drink can never be truly verified, but it's likely it was a product of the US/Mexico border regions between the 1930s and early 1950s.

Hemingway Daiquiri

(The Old Man and the Sea)

Ernest Hemingway needed a bathroom. Or so the story goes. The novelist had stopped into Havana's El Floridita bar.. On his way out, he noticed the bartender setting up Daiquiris. Never one to walk past a drink, Hemingway took a sip. Not bad, he said, but he preferred them with no sugar and double the rum. The bartender made one as specified, and then named the drink after him.

Paloma

(Pimienta Rosa)

When the average American thinks of Mexican cocktails, the margarita is likely the first drink to come to mind. But hiding in the margarita's icy shadow is the real treasured drink of Mexico, La Paloma. Traditionally, the Paloma is served on the rocks and prepared by mixing tequila, fresh lime juice and grapefruit-flavored soda.

The history of the drink is obscure, no one knows for sure who invented the Paloma. Some credit the legendary Don Javier Delgado Corona, owner of the beloved La Capilla bar in the aptly-named town of Tequila in Jalisco, Mexico. Since Corona is also ascribed to creating another soda-based tequila cocktail, the Batanga (Coca-Cola, tequila and lime juice), this story seems plausible.

Mint Julep

(Sazerac Me)

The Mint Julep is a bourbon cocktail best known for being the signature drink of the Kentucky Derby.

The Mint Julep gained prominence in the southern United States during the 18th century, and it first appeared in print in 1803 in John Davis' book "Travels of Four and a Half Years in the United States of America." He wrote that the Mint Julep is a "dram of spirituous liquor that has mint steeped in it, taken by Virginians of a morning." An ice-cold whiskey drink is certainly one way to start your day.
